Respecting religious differences and ethics

I recognise and appreciate the beliefs of other people.

Read the passage and answer the questions that follows:

People go to pray so that they become good and kind with acceptable ethics. There are different religions like Islam, Christianity and Hinduism in our community. Praying helps people to be kind, loving, respectful, patient and work together. It also, helps them to avoid bad behaviour such as being greedy, stealing, fighting and being unfaithful. When people pray, they learn to be good and behave nicely. Good behaviour is important for a person and his or her community development. A person with good ethics is accepted in the community.

At Amani Primary School there were three pupils named Furaha, Tumaini and Baraka. These pupils were in Standard Two and had different beliefs. They attended different sessions in school, including religious. In the religious session they learn to be loving, patient, cooperative and care for others. Furaha and Tumaini were obedient and eager to attend all sessions. Baraka did not like to participate in religious sessions. During the session, he would rather run away and hide behind the classroom. Because of this behaviour, Baraka was naughty, selfish and did not care about others. One day, the teacher told them the effects of not attending religious sessions. The teacher said, "If you miss the religious sessions you cannot learn good things for the community. Therefore, you will not be a well-behaved child and not accepted by the community". Furaha and Tumaini decided to talk to Baraka. They advised him to attend religious sessions to learn many good things for the community. Baraka agreed and started attending religious
